

Fidelity of Response to Intervention Implementation in Georgia's High Schools

Research Questions:

- To what level of fidelity do high schools in Georgia implement the requirements of Response to Intervention?
- What are the common factors that describe the implementation requirements of Response to Intervention?
 - How do the scores on the identified factors vary across high schools and elementary schools in Georgia?
- How do select administrators explain their levels of implementation (factor scores) of the identified factors?

The pilot study will follow the same process (i.e. instrumentation, methodology, data collection method, statistical analysis) as the complete study, except on a much smaller scale (1 school system on the south side of Atlanta as opposed to the entire state of Georgia). Therefore, the literature review will be the same since it provides the historical context and justification for both the pilot and complete research studies.